Make your plans now to attend the 78th annual meeting; it will be terrific! There will be a membership-wide email announcement and a posting on the Society website when on-line registration is available in early February.

The meeting will take place at the Lisle Hilton Hotel, in Lisle, Illinois, just outside of Chicago. You may reserve your room and find directions at the link on the Society’s website under “Conferences.” The welcome social is on the evening of Thursday, June 9; sessions will run throughout the day Friday and Saturday; there will be optional field trips to Cantigny Park and the First Division Museum at Cantigny (our host), as well as to the Museum of Science and Industry in Chicago; the awards luncheon and evening graduate student reception are on Friday, June 10; and the banquet will be at Cantigny Park on Saturday, June 11.

The projected costs are: conference registration, $150.00 for members, $200.00 for non-members and $75.00 for graduate students. The welcome social and graduate student reception are free, as are the field trips to the First Division Museum at Cantigny. Field trips downtown are $35.00. The banquet cost is $65.00. For persons arriving by air, ground transportation to Lisle from O’Hare is about $40.00; from Midway, about $50.00.

The program is shaping up beautifully and will be announced shortly. We anticipate having 8 sessions of at least 90 minutes with 8 panels in each session for a total of 64 panels. The last Friday session will go for an hour and 45 minutes to accommodate 4-paper panels and larger roundtables. The Program Committee, under the great direction of Jennifer Keene, wishes to thank everyone who proposed a paper or panel. Suffice it to say that we will examine “Ways of War” from many fresh and important perspectives. There will be presidential panels organized by the International Society for First World War Studies, H-Minerva, and the Chinese Military History Society. As well, we will have professional development panels on careers for military historians in the federal government and on how to get published.

In addition to book vendors, we will have a room set aside for military history organizations who have been invited to provide information about their work. These include museums, battlefield preservation groups, re-enactors and interpreters, historic vehicle, aircraft and ship preservationists, archives and libraries, war-gamers and others who are part of the broader military history community. We think this is an exceptional networking opportunity for all of us.

Information on the First Division Museum is at www.firstdivisionmuseum.org.

We hope to see EVERY member of the Society (and many prospective members!) in Lisle in June!
Fellowship Announcement

Workshop Announcement and Call for Papers

On March 10 and 11, 2011 the Baltic Defence College located in Tartu, Estonia will host a workshop on the experience of small states that deploy forces to active conflicts and peacekeeping operations. The first day of the workshop will focus on the experience of the three Baltic States in deploying military and civilian personnel to conflict areas. The second day of the workshop will focus on the experience that other smaller states have had in deploying units and personnel to conflict areas as a part of peacekeeping or military coalition operations.

The Baltic Defence College is interested in presentations and papers covering all aspects of force deployment to include pre-deployment preparation, the role of force deployment in a nation’s foreign policy, the relationship of the small states to international organizations and coalitions, the experience of small state forces in active operations, and lessons learned from small state deployments. The Baltic Defence College will consider the publication of selected papers.

If you would like to present a paper at the workshop please contact the Dean of the Baltic Defence College, Dr. James Corum, at james.corum@bdcol.ee or Mr. Didzis Nimants at didzis.nimants@bdcol.ee before 20 February, 2011. If you wish to participate, please contact Mr. Nimants no later than 1 March, 2011. The Baltic Defence College can provide accommodation to people presenting papers.

Dissertation Prize Competition

For the academic year 2011-12, the John A. Adams ’71 Center for Military History and Strategic Analysis at the Virginia Military Institute will offer a grant to support dissertation research in the history of the U.S. military during the Cold War era. Entitled the Adams-Collins Dissertation Prize, the award of $3000 recognizes the generosity of VMI alumni John A. Adams and George Collins, Jr., in furthering Cold War studies.

To be considered, eligible graduate students should submit a brief proposal delineating their doctoral research, its relevance to the U.S. military during the Cold War, a proposed time-line, and their credentials.

Deadline for submissions: 31 March 2011

Student Prizes Awarded at NGPHC

John Sager, a grad student at Texas Tech University, won the 2010 Society for Military History - First Division Cantigny Museum Prize for the Best Paper in Military History Presented by a Graduate Student at the Northern Great Plains History Conference. The prize, co-sponsored by SMH and the FDCM, is worth $400. John’s paper was entitled “‘The Army for the Protection of the Entire Nation:’ Universal Military Training and the Concept of the American Citizen.”

Allan Branstiter, Minnesota State University, Moorhead, won the SMH Prize for the Best Undergraduate Student Paper in History at the 2010 Northern Great Plains History Conference. The prize, co-sponsored by the SMH and the First Division Museum at Cantigny, is worth $200.

Call for Papers

Soldiering has long been considered a central organizing experience of modern life. With the invention of conscription in the 1680s, the consequent multiplication of national standing-armies, and the coupling of soldiering with citizenship, the individual and aristocratic warrior was replaced by the democratic and collective figure of “the soldier of the revolution.” His body no longer marked by the natural signs of strength, courage and pride, the soldier had become, by the late eighteenth century, something that can be made. Disciplined en masse through standardized military programs that mimicked the constancy of the factory, soldiers were not only manufactured; for two centuries they themselves embodied the labor power envisioned in manufacturing new political orders at home and across the vast imperial landscape. The two world wars, quintessential displays of modern soldiering, were arguably also the last of their kind, and marked both the culmination and the end of soldiering as a near universal experience, social institution, and political subjectivity.
Juxtaposed with and against these historical prefigurations, this two-day conference wishes to examine the gradual disintegration of the Soldier-Subject in the postwar period and the ‘afterlife’ forms of modern soldiering, from the early days of the Cold War to the current manifestations of the ‘Global War on Terror’. What happens to soldiering when armies are privatized and corporations take over the state’s “dirty business of war”? When “irregular,” “asymmetric,” “low-intensity” warfare is the order of the day? When the once politically significant distinction between soldier and civilian is destabilized in the now prevalent theaters of “ethnic conflict”? When technical experts become soldiers and human soldiers are gradually replaced by technological systems, such as unmanned drones and armed robots? How have these contemporary forms of soldiering influenced social, economic and political realities? And how do they contribute to the increased ethical isolation of war and conflict?

We seek rich, rigorous graduate student contributions from across the academic spectrum and across historical periods. Through soldiering, this conference aims to provide a locus for rewriting conventional military and political histories, revisiting anthropological accounts of violence and the state, and expanding the definition of warfare – both temporally and spatially. Themes may include:

- From “Cannon Fodder” to “Enhanced Survivability”: The Birth of the Vulnerable Soldier
- Shell-Shock,’ PTSD and Mental Preparedness: Trauma Culture and Its Aftermath
- Army Alpha, Army Beta: Screening, Selection, and the Making of Military Kinds
- From Ethical Lapses to Professional Failings: Soldiering as a Vocation
- Enlightened Occupiers: From ‘Hearts and Minds’ to the Human Terrain Teams
- Armies for Hire: Privatized Defense and Corporate Warfare
- Accidental Guerillas,’ Child-Soldiers, and Other Paramilitaries
- International Soldiers: Military Humanitarianism, Peace Corps, and Human Rights Training
- Identity Politics Goes to War: From ‘Blue Discharge’ to ‘Don’t Ask, Don’t Tell’ and Beyond
- The Paris-Match Saluting “Negro” and Other Mythologies: the Soldier as Signifier
- Reorganizing the Military-Industrial Complex: New Media and Warfare Simulation

Prospective participants are asked to write a 600 word abstract that outlines the paper’s topic, methodology, and argument, as well as how the prospective participant’s research interests relate to the theme of soldiering more generally. Participants will be notified by early March whether their paper has been accepted into the conference. Please note that participants may be eligible to receive full or partial stipends for transportation to the conference.

Abstract Submission Deadline: February 15, 2011. Abstracts can be uploaded on the conference website: isites.harvard.edu/soldieringconference (under the “Submissions” tab). Please make sure to include the following information: full name, institutional affiliation, the title of your paper, and contact details.

The symposium “1811: The Year of Decision,” is the second of four annual educational symposia that will be held to commemorate the War of 1812 Bicentennial. The first symposium, “The Gathering Storm: the Rise of Tecumseh,” was held in June 2010 and featured R. David Edmunds, the Watson Professor of American History at the University of Texas at Dallas and Andrew Cayton, professor of history at Miami University, as well as members of the Eastern Shawnee and the Absentee Shawnee. Historic Southern Indiana, a regional resource program of the University of Southern Indiana’s Division of Outreach and Engagement, is sponsoring the symposium. The history departments at the University of Southern Indiana and Vincennes University are assisting with the program. The event will be held at the Indiana Center for Applied Technology on the Vincennes University campus in Vincennes, Indiana. The symposium is scheduled for June 25, 2011 and will be held on the last Saturday of June through 2013. The symposium day will feature scholarly lectures and/or panel discussions. This year’s theme will deal with the events of 1811 that were leading up to the War of 1812, most notably the Battle of Tippecanoe. Papers that challenge existing histories and offer new approaches to the topic are of particular interest for this year’s symposium.
In that vein, possible themes for panels and submissions may include but are not limited to: Native American Perspectives, Popular Memory of the War and Commemoration, the War of 1812 as a National Event, and the War of 1812 as a classroom topic. Complete panels of two or three presenters are preferred but roundtable discussions and individual papers will also be considered. Poster sessions are welcome.

Participants will have the opportunity to tour local historical sites such as Grouseland, the Indiana Territory Capitol State Historic Site, and George Rogers Clark National Historical Park. The event is open to the public. Information about the 2010 program is available at http://www.usi.edu/newsinfo/release/press_detail.asp?num=3587 Interested presenters and participants should send a one page paper proposal along with a short c.v. to Kristalyn M. Shefveland (kmshefvela@usi.edu) no later than March 1, 2011. Applicants will be notified of the status of their proposals by April 1, 2011. Financial assistance for travel will be available on a limited basis.

2011 ELECTION – CANDIDATE BIOGRAPHIES

CANDIDATE FOR PRESIDENT OF THE SOCIETY FOR MILITARY HISTORY

Joseph T. Glatthaar
Present Position: Stephenson Distinguished Professor of History at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Education: B.A. Ohio Wesleyan Univ. (1978); M.A., Rice Univ. (1981); Ph.D. Univ. of Wisconsin-Madison (1983). Special Appointments: Visiting Associate Professor, Combat Studies Institute, U.S. Army Command and General Staff College, 1984-85; Harold K. Johnson Chair, U.S. Army Military History Institute, 1991-92; Visiting Professor, Department of History, U.S. Military Academy at West Point, 2003-04; Special Committee for Secretary of the Army on Medal of Honor for Teddy Roosevelt; Department of the Army Historical Advisory Committee, 1994-98 (Chair, 1996-98); Committee to formulate curriculum on Joint Commands for U.S. Armed Forces, 1993; Member of the Shy Committee, assisting the Department of the Army Historical Advisory Committee forecast Army’s Historical needs in the early twenty-first century, 1992.

William T. Allison

Special Appointments: Visiting Professor, Department of Strategy and International Security, USAF Air War College (2002-2003); Member, Department of the Army Historical Advisory Committee (2007-Present); Chair, Department of History, Georgia Southern University (2008-2010); Visiting Professor of Military History, USAF School for Advanced Air and Space Studies (2010-2011).

SMH Activities and Service: Organizer, 2008 Annual Meeting, Ogden, Utah; Recruitment and Membership Committee (2005-2008); Finance Committee (2009-Present); Editorial Board of the Journal of Military History (2008-2011).

As a member of the Society of Military History since the early 1990s, I have seen the SMH evolve from a national organization of academic military historians to a truly international professional organization that welcomes not only historians from the academic, official, and serving military communities, but also embraces new approaches to the field from other disciplines. The annual meeting has grown in both number of attendees and quality of panels, and the Journal of Military History is the leading international scholarly publication for military historians. Acceptance into the American Council of Learned Societies has solidified the SMH’s position among peer organizations. All of this and more is testament to the Society’s prudent direction and effective leadership over the past several years. The SMH must continue recruiting new members, especially among graduate students, continue reaching out to new constituencies, such as SHAFR, AHA and OAH, and continue taking advantage of an increasingly diverse and always willing membership to maintain this momentum. The SMH is solid, but it can always be a stronger and better advocate for military history.

Gregory J. W. Urwin

Present Position: Professor of History, Temple Univ. Education: B.A. Borromeo College of Ohio (1977); M.A. John Carroll Univ. (1977); Ph.D. Univ. of Notre Dame. Special Appointments: General Editor, Campaigns and Commanders Series, University of Oklahoma Press (1999-Present); Associate Director, Center for the Study of Force and Diplomacy, Temple University (1999-2010).

SMH Activities and Service: Finance Committee (2007-2009); Board of Trustees (2009-Present); Chair, Program Committee (2009-2010).

Area(s) of Historical Specialization: U.S. and British Military History; American War of Independence, U.S. Civil War, World War II; Race and Warfare.

The Society for Military History (SMH) is a unique coalition of academics, government historians, and independent scholars. We can take pride in how our society has redefined and revitalized military history over the past three or four decades. We need to continue our efforts to inform non-military historians that SMH members produce rigorous scholarship that enriches the entire profession. With many of the giants who presided over our “Military History Revolution” retiring or passing away, we must cultivate a new generation of leadership and provide it with opportunities to keep the banner aloft. That consideration, as well as a desire to promote healthy levels of diversity, guided me when I recruited the 2009-2010 Program Committee. SMH efforts to shape an even brighter future for our sub-discipline should include recognizing the emergence of vibrant new military history graduate programs in the Southeast, Southwest, and New England. In this age of tightening academic budgets, we need to remind college and university history departments that military history will boost their enrollments and serve as a powerful gateway to draw more majors into their degree programs. The prospect of tightening federal budgets also makes it incumbent upon us to highlight the vital contributions of military historians employed by the armed forces toward improving national security.

NOTES...from the Executive Director

By Robert H. Berlin

Vote! Vote! Vote!

Your ballot for the Society’s semi-annual election of officers and trustees is enclosed in this issue. I encourage you to read the candidates’ biographical information and cast your vote by marking the ballot, putting on postage and mailing. The ballot is already addressed to the Tellers Committee. The nominations committee, chaired by past president Carol Readon, with members Bill Donnelly and Rick Herrera, has presented an outstanding, well qualified slate of candidates for all positions. The Society is grateful for the work of the committee and to all the candidates for their willingness to serve.

The Society examined having the election on line but decided to continue with a paper mail in ballot, for two reasons. First, we lack email addresses (essential for online voting) for approximately twenty percent of members and secondly, the cost of approximately $2,000. If the Society does not have your email address please provide it to our office at the Journal.

2011 Annual Meeting

The Society’s annual meeting will be June 9-12 at the Hilton Hotel in Lisle, Illinois hosted by the First Division Museum at Cantigny in nearby Wheaton. Meeting sessions, publisher’s displays, receptions and the awards luncheon will be held at the Hilton. The banquet will be on the museum grounds. If you have not already made your room reservation at the Hilton I urge you to do so now to avoid disappointment. The rate is $119.00 per night plus tax and includes Internet access, buffet breakfast daily, parking, and shuttle service to nearby restaurants and shopping. Reservations can be made online from the SMH website http://www.smh-hq.org/conference.html or by calling the hotel at (630) 245-7623 and requesting the Society for Military History meeting rate. O’Hare and Midway International Airports serve the Chicago area and you will need to arrange your own transportation from the airport to the hotel and return. O’Hare is nineteen miles and Midway twenty-five miles from the hotel. The meeting website with registration information will be available by the beginning of February. Paul Herbert, the meeting coordinator, and Jennifer Keene, the program committee chair are dedicated to making the Society’s 78th annual meeting a superb one. See you there!

Future Annual Meetings

The 2012 meeting will be May 10-13 at the Hyatt Regency Hotel in Arlington (Crystal City), Virginia near Ronald Reagan National Airport. The Army Historical Foundation is the host and Matt Seelinger the meeting coordinator. The room rate will be $139.00 per night plus tax.

The Society’s 80th annual meeting will be March 14-17, 2013 in New Orleans, Louisiana at the Sheraton Hotel hosted by the University of Southern Mississippi, the National World War II Museum and Southeastern Louisiana University.

The 2014 meeting will be in Kansas City, Missouri at the Westin Crown Center Hotel April 3-6 hosted by the Department of Military History at the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College, the CGSC Foundation; Liberty memorial—National World War I Museum (a short walk from the hotel); the Harry S. Truman Presidential Museum and Library in Independence, MO and the Department of History, University of Kansas in Lawrence, KS.

SMH has sponsor offers for the 2015 and 2016 annual meetings. Selections will be announced at or shortly after our 2011 Illinois meeting.

American Council of Learned Societies (ACLS)

The purpose of the Council, as set forth in its constitution, is “the advancement of humanistic studies in all fields of learning in the humanities and the social sciences and the maintenance and strengthening of relations among the national societies devoted to such studies.” ACLS hosts an annual meeting of academic society executive directors known as the conference of Administrative Officers. As SMH is one of the newest members of ACLS this was my first time representing SMH at this annual meeting. The ACLS Conference of Administrative Officers (CAO) held its 2010 fall meeting in Vancouver, B.C., on November 4-7. The meeting was hosted by Tourism Vancouver who, along with Vancouver tourist organizations and hotels, paid most expenses. The Society and I were warmly welcomed by both the ACLS leadership and staff and by fellow CAO members. The meeting provided a valuable opportunity for me to meet and discuss with the executive directors of academic societies all aspects of their operations and procedures. Participating organizations included large organizations: the American Historical Association, the Latin American Studies Association and the Modern Language Association and smaller ones: American Society for Environmental History and the Association for the Advancement of Baltic Studies.

Panel presentations at the meeting included: the motivations and challenges of international meetings of learned societies; ways to build societies’ capacities through brokering services; executive director transitions; the future of the post-print journal which included representatives from libraries, publishers, and presses; and a useful wrap up session where the group shared trends in society membership and operations. The entire meeting was well organized, productive and demonstrated the value of our ACLS membership.

NCH Washington Update

By Lee White of the National Coalition for History

This is a compendium of items which might be of interest to members of the Society from several recent NCH Washington Update newsletters.

STATE DEPARTMENT HISTORICAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE MEETS-The State Department’s Advisory Committee on Historical Diplomatic Documentation (HAC) met on December 13. The Historical Advisory Committee (HAC) reviews records, advises, and makes recommendations to the Office of the Historian concerning the Foreign Relations of the United States (FRUS) documentary series.

The meeting began with the selection of a new chairman. Dr. Richard Immerman (representing the American Historical Association on the panel) was unanimously elected replacing Dr. Robert J. McMahon.

The acting-Historian of the State Department, Ambassador Edward Brynn, gave a brief update on the office’s activities. The Historian’s Office is in the process of preparing a move to new, larger office space late next year. He reported that Carl Ashley was named chief of the Declassification and Publication Division. Ambassador Brynn stated that he intended to stay on in his position in an acting capacity under a permanent successor is named.

Deputy Historian David Herschler stated that the office was making good progress on all fronts. With regard to the FRUS, the staff had declassified three volumes since September and expected three more before the HAC next met in early-2011. Six volumes had been completed this year bringing the total of the Nixon/Ford administrations to 37 volumes. Herschler also announced three new historians had been added to the staff and that he hoped the remaining vacancies would be filled within the next month.

Herschler noted that the “The American Experience in Southeast Asia, 1946-1975” conference held in September was a huge success. Secretary of State Clinton gave the opening address at the conference which brought together key policymakers and scholars of the Vietnam War era.

2011 will mark the sesquicentennial of the FRUS and the office is considering the publication of a history of the FRUS.

The committee received an update from Sheryl Shenburger, the Director of the National Declassification Center (NDC) at the National Archives. She noted the cooperation of the Historian’s Office in expediting declassification of State Department records. The NDC has been tasked by President Obama with eliminating the 417 million page backlog of records awaiting declassification by the end of 2013. She reported her office had just released a declassification prioritization plan based on public interest and researcher use. The NDC is also considering special collection reviews such as the Pentagon Papers or the creation of the Berlin Wall.

NATIONAL ARCHIVES UNVEILS NEW ARCHIVES.GOV WEBSITE—On December 13, the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) launched a redesigned web site (www.archives.gov) as part of its Open Government Initiative. The new Archives.gov web site features:

- A new home page voted by the public in July 2010. The public and National Archives staff participated in the redesign process. A multi-faceted participatory approach, including online card sorts, voting on home page designs, and usability testing was used to gather input to create content organization on Archives.gov;
- A new interactive “Our Locations” map of NARA’s facilities nationwide;
- Historical documents and streamlined access to military service records (81 percent of Archives.gov visitors are looking for this information);
- Single topically organized sections focused on the needs of both casual browsers and professional researchers; and
- Easy links to National Archives’ social media sites, including Facebook, Twitter, Flickr, YouTube, and both the Archivist’s AOTUS blog and other National Archives blogs.

NATIONAL DEClassIFICATION CENTER ISSUES PRIORITIZATION PLAN—The National Archives National Declassification Center (NDC) recently released its 2011 Prioritization Plan for eliminating the 400+ million page backlog of reviewed, but unavailable archival records. President Obama has charged the National Archives with eliminating the backlog by December 2013.

Also available, as Appendix B for Civilian Records and Appendix C for Defense records are FY 2011 Civilian and Defense work plans for Federal records. These plans provide greater detail on those records that will be processed in 2011.

The plan is a roadmap for the NDC to declassify and process for release federal records and Presidential materials. The annual work plans provide greater detail about which entries or subject areas within records groups are scheduled for processing this year. NDC Director Sheryl Shenberger noted that “input from the public helped us focus on where to begin,” but she added that “our goal is to meet the President’s deadline to process the entire backlog by the end of 2013.”

The plans may be viewed online at http://www.archives.gov/declassification/final-prioritization-plan.pdf. Additionally, comments about the plans or their implementation may be posted on the NDC blog [http://blogs.archives.gov/ndc] or e-mail to ndc@nara.gov. Progress updates and new release highlights will also be posted on the web site and announced on the blog.

NEW NAZI WAR CRIMES REPORT RELEASED—The National Archives has released to Congress a new report on Nazi War Crimes: Hitler’s Shadow: Nazi War Criminals, U.S. Intelligence, and the Cold War. The report is based on findings from newly-declassified decades-old Army and CIA records released under the Nazi War Crimes Disclosure Act of 1998 (the Act).

These records were processed and reviewed by the National Archives-led Nazi War Crimes and Japanese Imperial Government Records Interagency Working Group (IWG), and written by IWG.
historians Richard Breitman and Norman J.W. Goda.

The report highlights materials opened under the Act, in addition to records that were previously opened but had not been mined by historians and researchers, including records from the Office of Strategic Services (a CIA predecessor), dossiers of the Army Staff’s Intelligence Records of the Investigative Records Repository (IRR), State Department records, and files of the Navy Judge Advocate General.

Hitler’s Shadow augments the IWG’s 2007 final report to Congress, and includes wartime and postwar US intelligence documents on the search for and prosecution of Nazi war criminals; Allied protection or use of Nazi war criminals; and the postwar activities of war criminals both in the United States and abroad.

Background

The passage of the Nazi War Crimes Disclosure Act in October, 1998, set into motion the most intense, large-scale U.S. government effort yet to declassify records relating to a single subject. Preliminary surveys by twelve Federal agencies yielded a universe of more than 600 million pages of potentially relevant records, with more detailed surveys narrowing the universe to about 100 million pages.

Fifteen years later, more than eight million pages have been identified as relevant and declassified under the law. These records are now available to researchers to fill in the historical record, round out personal histories, answer longstanding questions about U.S. use of war criminals during the Cold War, and aid in tracing looted valuables. These answers may help to provide a measure of justice to some of the surviving victims of horrific World War II crimes.

President Clinton established the Nazi War Criminal Records Interagency Work Group (IWG) by Executive Order on January 11, 1999, and charged it with coordinating and expediting this immense undertaking among Federal agencies. He named the group’s members from the major agencies holding classified records and appointed three members to represent the public. Soon after its formation, the group set out to accomplish the tasks outlined in the statute: to locate, inventory, recommend for declassification, and make available all classified records of Nazi war criminal records.

In 2005, following the declassification and review of thousands of files containing newly-disclosed information about war crimes and war criminal documentation of the Nazis and the Japanese Imperial Government, the National Archives issued a final historians report summarizing insights gained as a result of the National Archives-supervised review of these documents. However, a large number of additional U.S. Army and CIA/OSS documents were received too late in the processing to be included in the 2005 report.

Subsequently, Congress provided funding to be used to report separately on these remaining documents – which may total as many as 2,000,000 more pages. Congress directed the National Archives to complete the review and historical analysis of these documents and to release a supplemental report to the 2005 IWG report U.S. Intelligence and the Nazis.

EISENHOWER LIBRARY RELEASES NEW RECORDS ON IKE’S FAREWELL SPEECH—Recently discovered memos, letters, and drafts documenting the evolution and writing of the most famous presidential farewell address in modern American history are now open to researchers at the Eisenhower Presidential Library and Museum. The Eisenhower Presidential Library received the material from Grant Moos, son of Malcolm Moos, a special assistant to President Eisenhower and his chief speechwriter at the time of the speech.

“The new records constitute a remarkable addition to what is known about this landmark speech,” said Karl Weissenbach, Library director. “We are all familiar with the phrase ‘military-industrial complex.’ Now we know even more of its history. One interesting new fact is that planning for the January 1961 speech began in May 1959.”

The addition of the Moos papers to Library holdings fills a gap in the records, according to Weissenbach. Library staff was aware of the Moos collection but did not know where the records were for 50 years. This mystery was solved by Grant Moos when he found the papers in the family’s Minnesota cabin.

The new records document the evolution of the Farewell Address from the earliest plans for the speech in May 1959 to multiple drafts in the final weeks leading up to the speech. Researchers now have access to 21 new drafts never before seen by the public. The drafts are annotated by Moos, fellow speechwriter Ralph Williams, and most significantly, Dr. Milton Eisenhower. “The Milton Eisenhower draft is quite significant,” added Weissenbach.
The records also document Moos’ involvement with Republican Party politics, as well as multiple drafts of the 1961 State of the Union address, including annotations in Eisenhower’s own hand.

January 17, 2011, will mark the 50th anniversary of Eisenhower’s farewell address. The Newseum in Washington, D.C. will host a symposium on January 18 to discuss the legacy of the speech. This event is co-sponsored by the Eisenhower Institute and Eisenhower Presidential Library and Museum.

The Moos materials are available for research in the research room of the Eisenhower Presidential Library and Museum and select documents are available online. Researcher application forms and other helpful information for conducting research at the Library are available on the web site (www.eisenhower.archives.gov). The research room is open to the public Monday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 5:15 p.m. Due to the heavy demand for access to the newly-released documents, there may be a time limit imposed upon researchers wishing to examine them.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS UNVEILS SEARCH SYSTEM FOR ARCHIVAL FINDING AIDS—The Library of Congress recently unveiled a completely redesigned special collections search system to help researchers locate primary-source materials. The new search engine can be found at www.loc.gov/findingaids/.

1,100 finding aids will now lead remote and onsite researchers to more than 32 million archival items in the Manuscript, Music, American Folklife, Prints and Photographs, Motion Picture, Broadcasting and Recorded Sound, and other Library of Congress research centers.

Clean, more powerful displays help visitors search and browse through the finding aids. Each finding aid progressively describes the parts of an individual collection, summarizes the overall scope of the material, conveys details about the individuals and organizations involved, and notes the conditions under which the collection may be accessed or copied. Links are provided from the finding aids to related digitized content when available.

Better keyword access to all Library finding aids as well as to the contents of individual documents lets users see their search results “in context.” Users can start a search on almost any page, making search refinement easy and eliminating the need to click back to a search page to conduct a new search.

Moving between archival finding aids and the Library’s collections in the Library of Congress Online Catalog is also now possible through integrated browse lists of subjects, names, titles and dates. Users can also follow links directly to individual collection records.

For researchers traveling long distances to use unique Library resources, alerts prominently identify when content is stored offsite and whether access restrictions apply. Hidden metatags on finding-aid displays let users add finding aids to their reference citation databases, and PDF versions support downloading and printing of these often long and complex documents.

As XML documents, Library of Congress finding aids are encoded using the international Encoded Archival Description (EAD) standard, which is jointly maintained by the Library of Congress and the Society of American Archivists. The new finding aid search application wraps the EAD XML documents into METS objects, then stores, indexes, and displays them from a native XML data store platform using a search language called XQuery.

THE LULL TRADITION
By Paul A. Thomsen

While few historians would dispute the claim that World War I served as a transformative world event, the convergence of blood, metal, and lives also shaped the thinking of United States Army Colonel Charles T. E. Lull. In the post war period, he strove to address the fundamental problems of information access and broad thinking in American warfighting, which he had seen first hand as part of the Allied Expeditionary Force (AEF). Although now an obscure name, Colonel Lull’s efforts aided a reengineering of the American Army’s approach to history, altered the general study of American military historical scholarship, and helped form the organization that would become the modern Society for Military History (SMH).

Born Charles Edward Terry Lull in January 1880 to Emma Terry of New England and United States Navy Captain Edward P. Lull in Washington D.C. The Lulls raised their son with a heavy emphasis on both the arts and the military sciences. As a child, Lull spent his formative years playing and studying in France. According to Alfred Hasbrouck in 1937 and surviving SMH documents, Lull's mother cultivated in him a son's lasting appreciation for both music and literature. As a veteran of the Battle of Mobile Bay and a former executive officer of the Naval Academy, Captain Lull instilled in his son a sense of duty, scholarship, and a life-long love of the sciences. Hence, when the family returned to the United States near the end of the nineteenth century, Charles Lull was enrolled in Lehigh University and rapidly acquired a talent for metallurgy. Within a year of obtaining his Bachelor's of Science, the young student also earned a Masters of Science from Columbia University and a draftsman position from John A. Roebling Son's Company, the builders of the Brooklyn Bridge. Through volunteering to serve in the New Jersey National Guard and his father's own military connections, in 1902, Charles Lull was awarded a commission in the United States Army. Over time, Lull's scientific background led him from the infantry to the Artillery Corps, and to study at the Chemical Warfare School, the War College, the Command and General Staff College, and the Ecole Superieure de Guerre of France. In 1910, he published an article on the HMS Indomitable in the Journal of the United States Artillery (later reprinted in The Royal Engineers Journal) and, during World War I, Lull served the General Staff as an Acting chief-of-staff of the 86th Infantry Division of the Allied Expeditionary Force in France, showing qualities of "an officer of unusual 'tactical sense'."

While attached to the Chemical Warfare Service after the war, Charles Lull (now a lieutenant colonel) and others began to study American military failures of the last war. Much of the problems encountered by the AEF, he thought, had been caused by a general failure to appreciate the political, military, and cultural histories of their allies and their enemies alike. As a well-read amateur historian, Lull saw the new Army Historical Division as a positive, but budgetary limited means of addressing these contextual concerns. At the Army War College, Lull had similarly attempted to gather resources concerning American army history, but the efforts were halting at best as the majority of relevant sources were widely scattered about the nation. Similarly, while the army produced approximately eighteen different journals on special technical fields (including chemistry, ordinance, and cavalry), he noted only a few were being read by non-specialists with a synthesis of historical/institutional experience and practical applications. Moreover, while domestic sources had become more available to army personnel, the military was daily losing the personal insights of retiring American soldiers to age and death. Worse still, the army had known little background about the civilian and military affairs of other nations before World War I and, with the Interwar service drain, their opportunity to better understand their nation’s present allies and adversaries was likewise passing away. Finally, very few members of the American military officer corps were engaged in communications with civilian academic sources who could address these concerns and, thereby, effectively aid the army in preparing for the next great conflict.

During the Great Depression, Charles Lull and a small group of military friends and civilian kindred spirits, including the Army Historical Division, the Library of Congress, the new National Archives, and other Washington area repositories, brought their own solution to the World War I dilemma. In 1933, they officially formed the American Military History Foundation (AMHF) in the hope of drawing the collective knowledge of both military personnel and civilian scholars together as resource base upon which the army might draw lessons from the past for the benefit of present and future Americans. Initially, Lull refused a formal position, instead preferring to shepherd the military officer corps together with Washington area archivists and librarians with mainstream academia. SMH documents also reveal that Lull dedicated his limited spare time to collecting available print matter for AMHF members. At the behest of the organization, he, for example, corresponded with veterans of the Plains wars and obtained Order of the Indian Wars documents. Using his own resources, Lull also purchased and preserved rare volumes of military history for use by future members, including several French and German works, the naval records of the Civil War, and the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion (which had once belonged to Civil War General and Adjutant General Edwin F. Townsend). Lull likewise led “Project Number 1,” which attempted to provide members with a complete directory of original sources relating to military history in repositories across the nation. Finally, when the organization required a trusted hand, he reluctantly accepted the position of Secretary-Treasurer of AMHF, guarding both her history and the organization’s meager economic resources.

On November 12, 1934, Colonel Charles T. E. Lull died from post-operative complications at Walter Reed General Hospital. He was buried in Section 4, Site 3019 of Arlington National Cemetery. In accordance with his will, the private papers and research library of this first unofficial archivist of the organization were donated in total to AMHF. Many of these original records can still be found in the SMH Records at Kansas State University.

Although the organization outgrew the limited scope of the AMHF, the American Military Institute, and the following Society for Military History, has continued to be guided by Lull’s tradition of close military and civilian relationships, historical preservation, and encouraged the sharing of resources and ideas between members for the betterment of the discipline.

*Colonel Lull’s portrait can be seen by members and student in the electronic database of Journal of Military History (JMH) articles, dating as far back as 1937. It can be found attached to Alfred Hasbrouck’s article “Colonel Charles Edward Terry Lull: Father of the Foundation” in the Volume 1, Number 4 issue of the JMH predecessor The Journal of the American Military History Foundation.
